2. ELECTIONS BILL: SECOND READING

Ed Davey

Daisy Cooper

Wendy Chamberlain

Tim Farron

Christine Jardine

Layla Moran

Sarah Olney

Wera Hobhouse

Munira Wilson

Jamie Stone

Sarah Green

That this House declines to give a Second Reading to the Elections Bill, notwithstanding the need to enable all British citizens living abroad to vote in UK parliamentary elections and to make voting more accessible for people with disabilities, because the Bill would make it harder for people to exercise their right to vote due to the introduction of voter ID, would make it easier for foreign vested interests to influence elections through political donations and weakened controls on party election expenditure, and because this Bill would stifle healthy opposition through constraints on those allowed to engage in regulated elections campaigning or registering as third party campaigners.

Layla Moran

Brendan O'Hara

Ed Davey

Tim Farron

Christine Jardine

That this House declines to give a second reading to the Elections Bill, notwithstanding the need for legislation around digital imprints and some accessibility improvements for disabled voters which do not go far enough, because it infringes on the right of expression of the electorate by allowing the Secretary of State to unilaterally modify and select which groups are allowed to campaign during an election period, creates unnecessary barriers to entry for voting, makes the Electoral Commission subordinate to the executive, would serve to restrict the franchise and thereby reduce the overall number of people able to participate in any future UK General Election and does not make provision for the UK

Parliament to match the devolved nations in Scotland and Wales by extending the right to vote to 16 and 17 year olds and other disenfranchised groups.
